

JOSEPH SMITH McDONALD — NANCY ELIZABETH CUMMINGS

Joseph Smith McDonald was born Oct. 16, 1842, in Crawfordsburn, Down County, Ireland, the ninth child and sixth son in the family of ten children born to James McDonald and Sarah Ferguson. His name held great meaning to his parents who only the previous year had heard and had accepted the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Joseph was little more than a year old when his family left Ireland to sail for Liverpool and thence to America, but with eight children ranging in age from Jane at sixteen years to Joseph at fifteen months, there were plenty of hands to care for the baby and for his brother David who was about three years old.

The McDonalds were a sturdy clan and weathered the ocean voyage well. In Nauvoo Joseph was too young to understand the meaning of persecutions. He was nearing his fourth birthday when a mob drove them from their home. To make sure they were gone the mob ferried them across the Mississippi River. Left without their belongings and huddled together to sleep on the bare ground, little Joseph understood full well that all was not as it should be.

The family had reached the Great Salt Lake Valley before Joseph was eight years old but he remembered always the Indians and buffalo that were so often seen enroute across the plains. In later years he wrote of a buffalo stampede: "One day the Captain rode about half way up the train of wagons and directed the first section to drive on. The other half were held back to allow room for a herd of buffalo to pass. There were hundreds of them all on the run. It took nearly half the day for them to pass."

Indians were a pertinent part of Joseph's childhood and early manhood. For several years after the family was established at Springville (March 1851) it was Joseph's lot to herd the cows in Hobble Creek Canyon. He wrote: "I herded cows every day. There were a lot of Indians around. They stole our dinners. We would fight for it, but they were men and we were boys. It always ended with us boys getting a licking and the Indians getting our dinner."

Joseph was only eleven years old at the onset of the Walker Indian War, but he later wrote in his journal what is no doubt a clear explanation of the beginning of that episode in Utah history. He states:
